Matthew PACE, based on the following information from a booklet entitled Yellow Spring and Huran. A Local History [Iowa], by J. W. Merrill and published in 1897.

“West of Northfield we find several claimants getting in their work. Three brothers-in-law, William MASCAL, Reuben MASON and Matthew PACE were early claimants in that neighborhood. Mascal’s claim was on what is now the McCray farm. Pace was north, embracing the Cox and Lee farms, and Mason was on the Braden and McClure places.

“Mascal was an early Justice of the Peace, and it is said that his docket was a “stunner.” His decisions show more judicial than clerical ability. He, with Pace, was baptized into the Mormon faith, at the Breckenridge spring (later known as Dr. Johnson’s spring, where John Eland now lives.) When Pace was baptized there in midwinter, he professed that ‘scales fell from his eyes as big as mussel shells.’ These claimants made their entries but sold out to the McClures and others, and moved away soon after their conversion to Mormonism. Mascal and Pace both moved to Buffalo, in Scott County. Pace died there and his remains were brought back and buried in Hazel Grove cemetery, within the bounds of his original claims. Mascal afterwards moved to Red Oak and died there. Later he moved to Page county, where he died some years ago. His family are there yet. These men were brothers-in-law of the late Robert Lee, who came about the same time and settled in Louisa County. There was another brother-in-law named Thornton Payne, who lived some years in the neighborhood, and then moved to Louisa County.”
